Kentucky Gov. Matt Bevin's office confirmed Wednesday that he will not seek re-election next year, the latest fallout from a series of scandals and ethics investigations that have engulfed his administration. Bevin's office released a statement saying he would not seek re-election. "The only person who can say with certainty that he has no plans to seek re-election in 2020 is Governor Bevin himself," said Susan Mosychuk, a spokeswoman for the governor. She said Bevin is confident that the people of Kentucky would support him in 2020. "Governor Bevin will fulfill his responsibility of running the state in a way that is best for Kentucky during this time of change and uncertainty," she said. Bevin told reporters on Tuesday, though, that he has "no plans" to run for re-election, and while Bevin has long considered running for federal office, his name does not appear to be on any potential 2020 Republican presidential field. The announcement from Bevin's office comes hours after he fired a top aide to Attorney General Andy Beshear after reports that she was romantically involved with a state trooper. Bevin's office said Wednesday the firing of Jennifer Lynn Hammond, who was the first lady of Bevin's staff, is being treated as a personnel matter. Bevin "does not believe this is an appropriate use of state resources or that it is the right course of action for the governor's office, or for the Commonwealth of Kentucky," Mosychuk said. Mosychuk declined to provide details of the relationship between Bevin and Hammond, saying that she had not been charged with a crime and is still a state employee. Hammond, a former state legislator, has served as Bevin's chief of staff since 2014. One of Bevin's top deputies, Cabinet secretary Jenean Hampton, was fired Monday after a conservative website, Kentucky Progress, published a Facebook post 82157476af
